About This Guide

This guide is designed to help strengthen our brand, by applying a standardised visual language across all of our communications whether it be digital or in print.

Following these guidelines is one way we can ensure our message is consistent and recognised, which in turn establishes a successful brand.

01 LOGOTYPE

01 LOGOTYPE

- 1.1 The Logo
- 1.2 Logo Variations
- 1.3 Logo Don'ts

1.1 THE LOGO

The Logo is the focal point of any brand identity and is the key to the brands recognition.

All elements & colours of the logo have been specifically designed to sit together and may not be separated and or changed.

There are 2 colour variations of the logo – a black version and a white version (as shown). The black version is considered to be the priority logo, and should be given first preference to its use.

The logo size should never be used smaller than 35mm.

1.2 LOGO VARIATIONS

There are some circumstances where the feature logo option is not viable, in which case there are 2 alternatives that can be used – a white version and a mono version (as shown).

Logo used in print material should always be included in the artwork as vector files (AI or eps).

Logo used in digital artwork should appear as png or jpeg files only.

1.3 LOGO DON'TS

To maintain consistency we need to make sure our logo does not appear incorrectly. We want to present a strong and confident award by maintaining one single identity.

Any variation from the approved configurations will weaken the visual impact and effectiveness of our identity.

- Do not alter the logo's proportions as these elements have been specifically designed to be symmetrical.
- Never separate the logos elements.
- Do not attempt to redraw or modify the logo in any way.
- Do not attempt to change the colour values of any elements within the logo.
- The logo size should never be used smaller than 35mm.

2.2 COLOUR BREAKDOWNS

A colour palette has been developed to cover all uses of the logo – on either print or digital material.

To ensure consistent reproduction, here are breakdown values for reproducing each of the colours in 4 colour process (CMYK) for print, for use on-screen (RGB), and the hexadecimal colour code for coding.

3.1 TYPE PALETTE

The primary typographic palette consists of one font family: Titillium.

This font has been chosen because it offers a variation in weight and personality.

No other fonts should be used.
